I wish to acknowledge my utmost sincere and deeply gratitude all the individuals who assisted me in this work and during my stay in Chiang Mai University, Thailand. I am especially indebted to the Chairman of International Graduate Programme also the Chairman of the Thesis Examining Committee and my major advisor, Ajarn, Phrek Gypmantisiri for his professional advise, sustained interest, and invaluable help. His strong support and enthusiasm provided me with the great self-confidence and motivation needed to finish my thesis. My special thanks are also extended to other committee member, Assoc. Prof. Dr. Benchaphun Ekasingh, Assoc. Prof. Dr. Tavatchai Radanachaless and Assoc. Prof. Dr. Anan Polthaneer for their constructive advises and comments that helped me lead to a successful completion of this research project. I should acknowledge the generosity, encouragement and support from all Ajarns and staff at Multiple Cropping Center, special thanks are due to Dr. Methi Ekasingh and Khun Om.

In addition, I would like to express my heartfelt thanks to leaders of DakLak People Committee, Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD), Mr. Binh, Mr. Luyen, Mr. Ke, and Mrs. Chinh for permitting and facilitating me to study in Chiang Mai University during the past two years. DakLak Extension Center, Mr. Sinh, Mr. Khai, Mrs. Lien, and Mr. Ngau for their sharing knowledge and practical work on extension field. Thanks also to all my colleagues of DARD, especial thanks to my colleagues of technical division, Mr. Thich, Mr. Ngoc, Mr. Phong, Mr. Tay for their shared knowledge and information during my field research.

I also wish to recognize the hard work of enumerators of the survey work in DakLak province. I am greatly indebted to the key informants, workshop participants and all farmers in the study area for their selfless cooperation, enthusiasm participation and sacrifice of valuable times for providing me with insightful responses for this work. These people are Mrs. Hue, Mr. Y Jim Eban, Mr. Sanh, Mrs.

H' Pok Eban, and 145 interviewed farmers at Cu Sue commune who spent their busy time giving me information during my lengthy interviews.

The thesis could not have come into this shape without the help, assistances, and cooperation from a large number of authors, agencies, and organizations that have supplied reports, magazines, books, and scientific and technical papers. In this, special thanks go to DARD, Extension Center, WASI, and Statistical Department, SWRM, and People Committee of Cu Sue commune.

Recognition is also extended to the Ford Foundation/Multiple Cropping Center for providing me with prestigious graduate scholarship for my course work and research, without which the pursuit of my degree would have been difficult. My profound thanks are also extended to Chiang Mai people and Vietnamese overseas for their hospitality.

I am thankful to the unforgettable friendship, encouragement, and company of all my colleagues in the International Graduate Program, Mr. Phuong, Mr. Tuan, Mr. Dorjee, Mr. Nhan, Mr. Att, Mr. Trung, Mrs. Chau, Mr. Giam, Mr. Thongsamount, and all Thai students for their warm friendship that have made my stay here illuminating.

Finally, and most of all, I own my deepest thanks to my wife Mrs. Hien for her constant supports, moral encouragement, understanding and taking good care of my lovely daughter Minh Hanh, who need to be looked after from her farther hands during the first months of her life. I should acknowledge love and encouragement obtained for every things from my parents, farther Du and mother Teo, my brothers Duyen, Duong, Dung and my sisters Loan, Hang else.
